

STYLE: CLASSIC COMIC BOOK | GENRE: STEAMPUNK SCI-FI / HISTORICAL FANTASY

Eccentric aerial inventor Baron Von Zinc races against a reality-warping temporal anomaly as Victorian London's great clocktower begins ticking backward, erasing the city's future

PANEL 1: THE CHRONOMETRIC DISRUPTION [TICK... TOCK... KACHUNK!]

NARRATION:

The air tasted of copper and ozone. In the fading twilight of 1888 London, time stopped being a river and became a collapsing undertow.

BARON VON ZINC:

"Fascinating... and deeply, catastrophically troubling. The seconds aren't just passing--they're unspooling."

PANEL 2: THE ECHOES OF TOMORROW [WHOOSH-SKRRRT!]

NARRATION:

With every metallic heartbeat of the tower, yesterday violently cannibalized tomorrow.

BARON VON ZINC:

"Hold fast, old man! If the mainspring shatters at the meridian, we'll all un-happen before tea time!"

PANEL 3: THE MERIDIAN OVERLOAD [KABOOM-ZAP!]

NARRATION:

There was no room for hesitation, only the desperate defiance of a mortal mind against the collapse of eternity.

BARON VON ZINC:

"Stubborn mechanics! Meet an equally stubborn mechanic!"

PANEL 4: THE RIGHTWARD MARCH [tick. tick. tick.]

NARRATION:

Silence settled over the cobblestones. The clock resumed its steady, relentless march into the unknown, leaving only the quiet relief of a tomorrow earned.

BARON VON ZINC:

"There. Forward again. Though I suspect my nerves will take until next Tuesday to catch up."